After sundown there are social gatherings, at which the guests sit out on the verandas, eat ice cream, fan themselves and while away the evening with conversation and in that "sweet doing nothing" way that is such a feature of life in the tropics. Very many of the white people of Jamalca were born in the island and so know nothing of the Christmas customs of the north. But there are also quite a number of Americans and Britishers here, and these try various ways to get up a semblance of Christmas, but it is like the crew of a polar expedition celebrating Fourth of July while icebound in the Arctic circle, and their Christmas is mostly one of reminiscence. Still wintering in the tropics is tages, and although Christmas here is apt to be a pretty lonesome time to Americans, they are very apt to find cause for congratulation after the fes-

Customs and Legends of the Non-

Yuletide as kept by the non-German population of Austria is very picturesque. On Christmas day the Poles in Galicia first attend mass and then sit down to family supper. The chief dish on the table contains consecrated eggs. which the father distributes. After eating, all eyes are closed and all heads bowed down to the table in the belief that Jacob's ladder is then descending from heaven to earth and down the ladder angels are coming to bless the worshipers and to carry away their earthly troubles to heaven. Among the Czechs the legend runs that he who most strictly fasts on Christmas eve will see the holy Christ in his dreams that night. In the evening the real celebration begins. All lights are then extinguished in the house; no fire, no light is visible. The children crowd toby the Christ Child and laid at the entrance of the house. The older females amuse themselves by throwing beated lead into water and gathering from the forms it assumes some hint as to the appearance of their future husbands.-Pittsburg Dispatch.
